PROJECT THEME

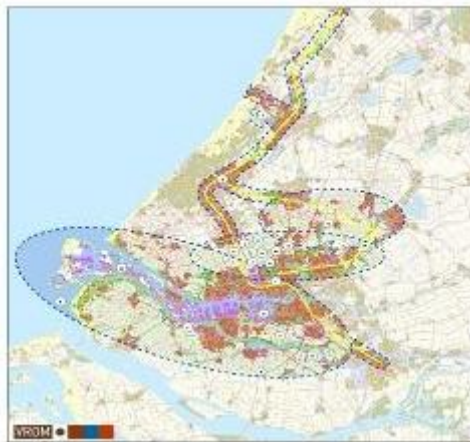

Increase the international economic competitiveness of the South Wing of the Randstad Holland, The Netherlands

Introduction

With its rich cultural history, its scenery and its strong mercantile tradition, Randstad Holland, in the western part of the Netherlands, has long defined the face of the nation. Nowadays this region is also the hub of the Netherlands' principal economic activities and international connections. This European region, with its variety of urban settings for business and commerce, is the engine of the Dutch economy. Today, economic processes are increasingly global in character, and networks and connections to other partners and participants are very important. New elements are introduced into worldwide competition. Cultural, social and environmental elements now stand alongside basic economic aspects as being relevant contributors to a strong and attractive climate for investment and location of business in the Netherlands. Transformation and adaptation are needed to anticipate these global changes.

Today, evidence suggests that in comparison with other competing regions, the economy of Randstad Holland is falling behind. Therefore, the economic infrastructure of the region must be strengthened. The Netherlands government wants to encourage the early development of large and complex spatial projects in four selected program-regions (South Wing; North Wing; the Green Heart; and the region Southeast of Brabant/North of Limburg). Selected themes and projects should fit into a broad governmental approach, and be capable of rapid realization.

The Ministry of Spatial Planning in the Netherlands has special responsibility for the further development of the southern part of Randstad Holland (the South Wing - see map below). Therefore, the workshop will focus on this sector. Two important questions face the South Wing...: how to achieve economic change; and how to create a more attractive living and social climate. We are therefore looking for innovative economic, social, cultural and environmental responses to current issues and problems in order to enhance the international economic competitiveness of the South Wing of the Randstad Holland.

Map: South Wing of Randstad Holland

South Wing of Randstad Holland

This area contains the Port of Rotterdam, Greenport Westland (glass horticulture) and the important international jurisdictional centre of The Hague. The region has more than a million inhabitants and can be regarded as one of the key economic centres of the Dutch economy. At the same time, the area faces a number of internal problems and challenges. Traffic is heavily congested. Internal and external accessibility is poor. Space is in short supply, hindering the achievement of many desired activities. Conservation of the green character of the surrounding area, and achieving the right balance between urbanization and landscape, are becoming increasingly difficult. Competition from other parts of the Netherlands seems to hinder further development, and weakens the area's position in the world market.

Additionally, there are external factors to be considered. The central economic heart of Europe is shifting eastwards due to the enlargement of the European Union. Further, the Netherlands is an exporting country, vulnerable to economic recession; and the strong currency makes our produce more expensive on world markets.

The Workshop

The main issue to be discussed in the workshop is how to overcome some of the above problems, and to strengthen the overall position of the South Wing? The central question is: how to increase the international competitiveness of the South Wing of the Randstad Holland, and broaden its economic profile? There are other closely related questions to be examined. For example:

- How can the South Wing achieve the right balance between urbanization and landscape; and how can the South Wing be developed into an attractive cosmopolitan urban network?
- How can we make the most of the opportunities that the Randstad Holland offers? such as the strong global position of the Port of Rotterdam, the Green Heart (nature within a ring of conurbations); the Greenport's quality architecture and urban design (Rotterdam); the rich accumulation of knowledge in the universities of Rotterdam and Delft, and in the institutions within the great knowledge corridor of Leiden-The Hague-Delft-Rotterdam); and finally, the benefits of water and coastline.
- What actions are needed – and at which level of government (European/ national/ regional/ provincial/ local)? Is it sufficient to stimulate and facilitate economic activity, accessibility and create attractive living areas? Is the building of more facilities and attractions for higher income groups a priority? Should we abandon further harbour and port investment and switch to the pursuit of strong alliances with neighbouring harbours port cities like Amsterdam, Antwerp and Hamburg? How can we build stronger connections between firms based on knowledge and innovative techniques, universities and cultural activities?

There is a link between the Candidate Planners Workshop and the ISOCARP 2005 congress theme 'Spaces for the Creative Economy'. The Randstad South Wing enjoys a high reputation in terms of its performance in the "creative economy". It is likely, therefore, that strategies linking culture, economy and technology, knowledge and innovation may be successful.

Currently, a departmental project is running on this subject. Input from Candidate Planners with knowledge of and experience with conurbation issues would be helpful at this stage and may inspire us to think about new ways of strengthening the international competitiveness of the (South Wing of) the Randstad Holland with an emphasis on the role of creativity in the economy and urbanized areas.

What does VROM expect from the workshop participants?

The NL Ministry VROM expects candidates to bring enthusiasm to the task of dealing with the subject matter, and a willingness to devise strategies in a group of candidate planners from around the world. In preparing for the workshop itself, VROM requests that the chosen candidates invest in finding out what their country is doing in order to improve its position in world markets.

- What is their government doing to counteract negative environmental effects?
- What are the key success factors in the international competitive position of your country or an important city in your surrounding area that is a strong driving force in the national economy in your country?
- In the case of candidates coming from a country that is geographically large, VROM suggests a focus on the nearest major economic centre.

What can workshop participants expect?

After selection, candidates will receive more information about the Case of the South Wing of Randstad Holland for reading in advance of the workshop, and have to prepare information (in photo, film or text) on a similar case in their own country. During the workshop itself, they will be asked to present this information.

From those presentations, we will try to draw up some general conclusions on the way to proceed, and then turn our minds to the particular case of the Netherlands.

In groups of three or four people, workshop participants will develop a strategy to be presented to the Congress participants of the ISOCARP Congress 2005. The results of their work will also be collected for presentation in a booklet, CD ROM or other format for the use of the Dutch research group in the Ministry of Housing, Spatial Planning and the Environment.
